Bird-eye's view showing the temple, its fung shui timber posts and the surrounding area

Façade of Hung Shing Temple

The front eaves of the entrance hall is supported by a system of granite columns and lintels decorated with fine rock and timber carvings

Interior view showing the covered courtyard and the end hall

Exquisite historic Shiwan (石灣) ceramic figurines dated 1887 at the parapet wall of the side chamber of the internal courtyard

A pair of timber poles in front of the temple which are believed to be erected for protecting the area against the ferocious spirit from the “tiger land” (虎地).
